Dear SAFE Friends & Supporters,

In the wake of the Sandra Cantu tragedy in Tracy, it is a harsh reminder that we all need to exercise best practices and safety education with the children in our lives that we love and care for. It is unfortunate that an incident like this brings to light the importance of strong communication with children and instilling them with the knowledge of what to do in a situation that makes them uncomfortable and could potentially be dangerous. Parents, caregivers, and those that work with children should discuss and plan ways to be as safe as possible.

Child Safety Tips

Here are just a few tips for you and your kids:

Keep open communication with your children. Discuss all types of safety with them.

Allow kids to tell you what makes them fearful, and encourage them to communicate their feelings on being safe.

Teach them how to recognize potentially dangerous situations; whether it's with someone they know, or someone they don't know.

Always play or travel with a friend.

Always tell an adult where you are going, even if it's just across the street to a friend's house.

Sometimes it's okay to say “no” to an adult. Talk about the times when they need to listen to adults and when it’s appropriate to say “no”.

Get to know your children’s friends and families.

If a child is spending time at home alone, make rules for the house with the child’s help. Discuss the rules and the reasons for having each one in place.

Talk about the difference between strangers and trusted adults with children. Encourage them to share with you when they are uncomfortable with the trusted adults.

Children need to know which adults they can go to in case of an emergency (police officers, trusted neighbors, store owners, relatives, etc.).

Go over some lures or tricks that dangerous adults may use:

-- Offer a ride in a vehicle

-- Offer candy, gifts, money, jobs, etc.

-- Request help

-- Use of threats/fear

-- Pretending to be a friend or trusted adult

-- Offer companionship

If a child feels that he/she is in danger – YELL, RUN, and TELL!

-- YELL loudly to draw attention to yourself and the stranger

-- RUN to a safe place

-- TELL an adult what happened
