represent Mission Bay's maritime history within the Mission Bay project area. The Blue p eter can and should have a future in the new Mission Bay.

The Port (owners of the building) and the San Francisco Redevelopment Agency have agreed to work with community on studying the feasibility of any potential reuse for the building. The Citizen's Advisory Committee for the Mission Bay Development has recommended that designs for the new park, with the Bluepeter and without it, continue to move forward dependent on the timely development of a financially feasible plan for the building.

We have hired a San Francisco firm that specializes in historic rehabilitation and development, to analyze the costs, feasibility and timeline issues for saving the building. We invite interested community members and stakeholders to join us to discuss their ideas, concepts and concerns for new uses for the building that will serve, and be embraced by, the local and broader community.

The building has a 6,500 sf footprint, and currently has a mezzanine.

Potential uses discussed to date include a fish market, small grocery, farmers market, casual food vendors , and café/restaurant.

Please forward this invite to anyone you feel might be interested in joining us.
